There is increasing recognition that structural racism and discrimination in health care and social policies contribute to poorer health outcomes for racial/ethnic minorities and other populations that experience health disparities. This seminar will highlight new data infrastructure for incorporating special populations in research and exploring the impact of structural racism and discrimination on trajectories of aging and health outcomes.